Changing the toxic migration narrative

Changing perceptions

every migrant has a story

"My experience as a migrant was not easy, but it was nothing compared to the odysseys endured by the millions of refugees..."

In 1964, I came to the United States from South Korea, then an extremely poor developing country that most experts, including those at the World Bank, had written off as having little hope for economic growth.

My family moved to Texas, and later to lowa. I was just 5 years old when we arrived, and my brother, sister, and I spoke no English. Most of our neighbors and classmates had never seen an Asian before. I felt like a resident alien in every sense

Over time, my family integrated into our adopted homeland, which in many ways has come to understand the benefits of diversity and multiculturalism. Still, as Pope Francis so powerfully underscored in his remarks to Congress last month, the United States - a nation built by immigrants - needs to do more to embrace "the stranger

All Six of America's 2016 Nobel Prize Winners are Immigrants

United States – Independent: Things may just have got a little awkward for politicians engaging in anti-immigrant rhetoric on both sides of the Atlantic: all six of America's 2016 Nobel Prize winners are immigrants, and some of the laureates themselves have started pointing this out, writes Adam Lusher.

- Migrants contribute to economies and development
- Migrants contribute more in taxes and social contributions than they receive in benefits
